The North Carolina Septic Tank Association is proud to announce that August 4-6, 2010 NCSTA will be holding the
2nd Outreach Symposium at Greenville Convention Center Greenville, NC

North Carolina, with good leadership, will soon recover from this economic recession. This will not be done by taking the same road out toward recovery that brought us crashing from the economic boom of three years ago. Our leaders will chart a new course, develop new commerce, bring in new industry, be more effective, and be more efficient.

Our leaders will not be considered only those elected officials that stand and make pledges and promises. Our leaders out of this recession will be the best of private industry and the best of the professional trades. They might be just like you, acting to provide a better life for your family, and seeking a new course of business. Our leaders will take the responsibility to lead themselves and others out of a bad situation by being “good stewards.”

A good steward will work for the gain and protection of the industry. They will provide leadership and be the person that devotes time to the family and community without immediate capital gain. Our industry, providing a necessary wastewater option for our citizens, needs to challenge ourselves to help the recovery of North Carolina. Too many of us think “What can I do, I just work with septic tanks?”

Our State and every other State needs the option of on-site or decentralized wastewater collection and dispersal. Budgets will not allow for the expansion of the Big Pipe to every home and development. There is hardly enough money to allow proper maintenance on existing treatment plant facilities. North Carolina, although becoming more “urban” and clustered together, still holds a high percentage of single family residences. And with proper planning and design, the use of decentralized systems can take place even in urban environments. This saves the capacity at the treatment plant for other uses.

Our 2nd Outreach Symposium is dedicated to the new vision. Clean, Green, and Growing is a showcase of our North Carolina and how our technologies can be utilized to create a better environment and a more prosperous economy. We will bring the new technologies and the best services. We have invited the leaders in this vital industry to participate with you. North Carolina is ready to begin the road to recovery. Attendance will gain your credit hours and let you see your friends and competition. Participation will give you and your business a headstart toward prosperity.

The North Carolina Septic Tank Association is offering its members and guests a great economic value. Take a few days off, come to Greenville, make some very important contacts, look for new opportunities, enjoy the friendship of others in your industry, get your credit hours, and do this at an unbelievably low cost. It’s not an expense, it’s an investment.
